Introduction

Davidson/Moore Survey Data Set on Regional Variations in Sexual Attitudes and Behavior of College Students

This study sought to ascertain the differences, if any, in sexual attitudes, sexual behavior, and risk-taking sexual practices of college students at four distinctly different universities: a historic Black public university; a Southern private university with a long-standing religious heritage; a Southwestern public university; and a Midwestern public university. An anonymous questionnaire was administered during regular university classes to volunteer respondents enrolled in select lower division and upper division classes. The questionnaire consisted of 127 open-ended and closed form questions in the following areas: family background, sex education, religious background, sexual attitudes, sexual behavior, contraceptive practices, sexually transmitted infection history, pregnancy history, sexual guilt, and sexual satisfaction. The data-set includes data from 1915 never-married women and 1111 never-married men.
